Looking at the candles

Psalm 119:105 says, "Your word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path."

That verse felt so real as I looked at dozens of candles burning at PS I Love You's 12-hour prayer gathering. The room glowed softly with candles, each one carrying the name of a child currently in foster care and the number of days they had spent there. Rows of names. So many children. So many stories. So many days spent waiting for stability, healing, reunification, or a forever home. Every flame was a reminder that God is still lighting the path for these children, even in seasons where they cannot yet see what's ahead. And maybe that's why this moment impacted me so deeply: years ago, someone prayed for me too. Someone believed God had a purpose for my life before I could even understand it for myself.

I selected a candle and began praying over her life, over every night she has cried, every transition she has had to endure, every question she may carry in her little heart, and every person connected to her story. I prayed that she would never feel abandoned, forgotten, or unloved. I prayed that the presence of God would surround her in every unfamiliar place and that even now, the Lord would be writing a story of protection, healing, and restoration over her life. That day, we were encouraged to take a candle home and continue praying for that child beyond the event. Because foster care may feel lonely at times, but no child walks that road alone.

Supporting children in foster care and the families who serve them.

Light in the Darkness

This spring, PS I Love You sought to answer God's call by being a light to foster children and their families in quiet, faithful ways. Through the Resource Center and the Shoe Event, children were cared for in a tangible way that reflected the love and provision of Christ. The 12 hours of prayer over families and children became a reminder that even in difficult seasons, God sees every need, hears every prayer, and walks closely with those carrying heavy burdens. These moments were not about recognition, but about making space for God's presence, comfort, and hope to reach families who need it most.

This season also brought the opportunity to speak at the Mother's Day brunch, encouraging and honoring mothers and caregivers who pour so much of themselves into others.

In every conversation, prayer, and act of service, PS I Love You has desired to humbly reflect the heart of Jesus by showing up, loving families well, and trusting God to work through even the smallest acts of faithfulness.
